MEET QUINCY

Born and raised in Montauk, Long Island, this pro surfer has been hitting the waves since she was seven. Here, Quincy gets candid about her start in surfing, how her hair handles endless amounts of saltwater, and more.

LET'S TALK SURFING.

How did you get your start in surfing?

"For a long time, I surfed in the boys division because the other girls were a lot older than me. By twelve, I was doing well in the contests and became eligible to compete in California. I landed some sponsorship deals, and things took off from there."

What's the most memorable trip you ever took?

"When I was 15, I went to Salina Cruz, Mexico to shoot an editorial for the all-women surf magazine, Salted. The waves were amazing. But even better, I was there with two older girl surfers, Coco Ho and Sage Ericson, who I'd always looked up to. I loved their style and learned so much from them."

With all of the sun and saltwater, how do you keep your hair healthy?

"Lots of moisturizing products. Twice a week, I use the Quenching Masque. And a mist of Hairdresser's Invisible Oil Finishing Spray always leaves my hair feeling so soft."

Your complexion's flawless. How do you keep your skin looking so fresh?

"I drink a ton of water – hydrating your skin is so important. I also use a moisturizing mask in the morning and at night to help balance my PH. Skincare is the one beauty thing I splurge on. I love La Mer."

Why is air-dry styling important to you?

"I'm in and out of the water too often to blow-dry my hair and style. So, I like products that enhance my natural texture – without too much work."
